The proliferation and cytotoxicity assays, based on the colorimetric reagent WST-1 (4-((3-(4-iodophenyl)-2-(4-nitrophenyl)-2H-5-tetrazolio)-1,3-benzene disulfonate), are used to monitor the growth of cell cultures or the response of cells to drugs. It is used to determine the number of viable cells, the growth rate, and the response to different concentrations of the drug of cells in a highly reproducible and rapid manner, in a microplate-based format. The protocol described here allows the high-throughput evaluation of drug cytotoxicity by using a 96-well-format device that combines features of 96- and 384-well microplates. This format allows the colorimetric analysis of several different drugs in the same microwell at the same time. Parts 1 and 2 of this series are here: What is a Wallet, and what are the differences between an Online Wallet, a Cloud Wallet, and a Hardware Wallet? If you've ever used a debit card, you know that: It has a "card number", which is just like any other credit card (except that it has a secret number encoded into the magnetic strip). You can use it online, or in person. You can make purchases as normal, or you can make purchases via EFT, or you can make purchases using a 2-step or multi-step authorization process, in which you first present the card, and then present a selfie, or passcode, or PIN.
